

2. Economics and Economy Element

The fiscal health of a community is essential to providing a high level of public services and community amenities, while contributing significantly to the quality of life. Economic conditions in the private sector gauge existing trends and opportunities and point towards shifts and transitions in the local economy. All of this affects the prosperity of Pleasant Hill residents and the tax base that supports the delivery of municipal services. The Economics and Economy Element includes goals, policies, and programs related to retention and expansion of existing business sectors as well as diversifying the economy to develop new kinds of businesses in the city.

Goals, policies, and implementation programs in this element are organized under the following headings:

Individual Mixed Use projects are not expected to contain any specific combination of these uses and may only include one land use. ## 2.1 Commercial Business Retention and Expansion

Pleasant Hill’s largest industries (by employment) include retail trade (20%), health care (23%), government (17%), and leisure and hospitality (13%). The City has an opportunity to cultivate a business mix that serves the evolving range of residents’ needs and desires, while also attracting visitors. Dining and retail establishments are particularly important, not only for generating revenue, but also as centers for community gathering and recreation. It is also important to support the growth of entertainment and other businesses that contribute to an exciting customer experience. Promoting an attractive shopping environment is critical to commercial success as brick and mortar retail evolves with the expansion of online sales platforms.

2.2 Economic Diversification and Expansion

The cornerstone for ensuring economic longevity is continued investment in successful local industries. While government and health care will continue to play a central role in the city’s economic base, it is important that the City also invests energy into diversifying industries and employment opportunities, particularly jobs suitable for residents who commute out of Pleasant Hill to work. In 2018, more than 80 percent of the City’s workforce commuted out of town, mainly to jobs in information technology, finance, and professional and technical services. A more diversified economy provides the potential for successful collaboration, as well as options to ensure that the city is resilient and able to maintain its economic competitiveness in the event of changing climate or economic conditions. The City can leverage strong partnerships with local education and workforce training institutions such as DVC to support business attraction and expansion. City policy should also recognize that economic growth in ~~the central~~ Contra Costa County and the surrounding region also benefits Pleasant Hill workers by reducing longer commutes.

2.3 Economic Infrastructure

Modern business activity depends on key communications infrastructure such as broadband capacity and access. As workplace and educational environments adapt to changing conditions, the availability of high capacity internet in residential neighborhoods in addition to business districts is increasingly critical. Also, changes in personal transportation systems to include electric vehicles, ride sharing services, car/scooter/bike sharing services, and increasing consumer interest in active transportation opportunities will dramatically change the need for transportation infrastructure. The City can improve its economic competitiveness by supporting the installation of future-oriented infrastructure and promoting the high level of services available to both businesses and workers in Pleasant Hill.
